

System for medical data collection

Abstract

Apparatus and method is disclosed for a data collection and monitoring system that utilizes a remote collection unit which has contained therein interaction software that allows the user to define and import data collection scenarios, capture data, update data, query data, and notify the user of adverse conditions triggered by the entered data values. The system has a means to allow transfer of the collected data to a main computer database for further review, reporting, and distribution purposes.